

People should look after their health as a duty to the society where they live, rather than for their own benefits. To what extent do you agree or disagree? (5.15)

Many claim that citizens should take care of their own health as this is a responsibility to the community to which they belong more than to themselves. In my opinion, I somewhat agree with this sentiment because a healthy individual contributes to prosperity and poor health leads to resentment and discrimination; however, there are exceptions where an individual's well-being is more important to themselves due to its undeniable benefits.

The reason why I believe that people have the obligation of staying healthy to society is that the prosperity of a community is closely related to the health status of individuals living in it. This is because healthy people individuals naturally have the energy and mindset to be more energetic and positive to work hard day and night to earn a decent salary and maintain a good standard of living. Therefore, communities governments can collect would be able to get enough personal income taxes from these healthy dwellers and become prosperous regions.

In contrast, I also feel that Furthermore, a society filled with unhealthy residents can patients with incurable diseases and disabled inhabitants will result in resentment and discrimination among community members. For example, some many poverty-stricken areas have witnessed require a significant portion the majority of of the national budget is used to treat diseases various health problems. There will be This can result in insufficient funding to improve infrastructure in these regions, causing potential discrimination of unhealthy dwellers and resentment from taxpayers.

However, I am receptive to the argument disputing the aforementioned logic that there are countries where people should prioritize their own health benefits over societies for themselves. A salient example would be in developing countries like China where it is undoubtedly unrealistic to rely on the state to financially support their citizens who are out of lack money for treatment in hospitals because of the inadequacy of funding.

In conclusion, I reiterate my partial agreement that individuals hold the responsibility of taking care of themselves to for their community's benefits. This is because healthy inhabitants contribute to society financially, while communities where health is poorly managed are filled with hostility and prejudice. However, I admit that individuals' an individual's health is chiefly related to themselves in some developing nations owing to financial shortages.

Comment [Dave1]: good difficult topic!

Comment [Dave2]: accurate – good!

Comment [Dave3]: hmm a bit unclear what this means...

Comment [Dave4]: this phrase doesn't really work here – too obvious

Comment [Dave5]: long and wordy but ok

Comment [Dave6]: too extreme – no one does this...

Comment [Dave7]: that is for them then – not for society...

Comment [Dave8]: this should be the first sentence of the paragraph and then you can develop what could be done with this money – very confused paragraph overall

Comment [Dave9]: not contrast – it's the same side!

Comment [Dave10]: too strong – not the topic at all

Comment [Dave11]: way too strong – not at all the topic!!

Comment [Dave12]: no strong claims – never say 'will'

Comment [Dave13]: I don't understand the discrimination at all – doesn't make sense
